

AVIATOR LOCKLEAR KILLED BY PLUNGE IN BLAZING PLANE

aviator who, it was said, danced with reckless abandon on the wing of his plane and otherwise mocked the fates. Then followed a page of pictures showing him hanging by his knees from the landing gear as the tapestry of panorama passed thousands of feet below him. The public realized that there was a new thrill under the sun.

Prosals folk demanded to know why the daring birdman was permitted to risk his life in this manner. Locklear himself responded with an answer. He wanted to demonstrate, he explained, that it was possible to transfer gasoline and oil from one plane to another while in flight. The public accepted this and applauded his efforts in behalf of aeronautics but those acquainted with Locklear smiled at the naive excuse.

It was my privilege to fly with him one day last year and remember reflecting on the sensation I should.

Strapped behind him I watched the quiet young aviator nonchalantly throw the ship into loops, side-slips and spins and range her toward the green turf inclosure of the motor-rome at Sheepshead Bay.

Locklear played with the air. Although he had no significance in his life, I remember distinctly once, when having attained a height of perhaps two thousand feet, he deliberately killed his motor and with drawing room ease turned and carried off a bit of conversation with me, much to my dismay. Never mind that we were slowly but surely settling down toward earth.

Finally I admonished him to "keep his eye on the road," and his response was a sudden roar of the motor, followed by a wild plunge ending in a loop only a few hundred feet above ground. His daring was a source of wonder even to his brother pilots, who predicted the fate which ultimately proved to be his.

When Locklear heard of the successful negotiation of the Atlantic by the two British flyers he immediately communicated with the War Department at Washington offering to duplicate the feat, but he was doomed to disappointment. He told me at the time that it was one of the greatest ambitions of his life and knowing the daring Texan there is no doubt that he would have accomplished his purpose.

The most colorful flyer of all is gone. Quiet, unassuming, fearless to the point of foolhardiness, the only time he recognized his own recklessness was when, as he explained to me in these words:

"I saw myself in the moving pictures the other night for the first time and it really scared me to watch those stunts."
The performance of them meant nothing.
At the time I asked him whether he ever thought of the possibility of falling and he replied: "No; I never give it a thought."
That was the spirit of former Locklear, a victim of his plaything.
